ROBERT BRANTLEY BURROW, 161 Red Mar Lane, Radcliff, Kentucky, advised he is the principal of the Fort Knox High School. The high school is located on the military reservation at Fort Knox, Kentucky.

One of the students at the school is [redacted] whose father is [redacted]. During the year 1970 - 1971, [redacted] had been a student at the school but had been having difficulties with his grades. As a result, [redacted] withdrew him from school over BURROW's objections.

In September, 1971, [redacted] again started at the high school in his [redacted] year. He appeared to have improved in his outlook and performances. However, on the morning of January 25, 1972, BURROW found it necessary to call [redacted] to the principal's office in regards to a book which belonged to one of his teachers, a Mrs. [redacted] and it had been missing. Several other students had identified [redacted] as the student who took the book.

When [redacted] first appeared in the office he was talked to be the assistant principal, Mr. [redacted] BURROW was not aware personally of what occurred in Mr. [redacted] office until Mr. [redacted] brought [redacted] into BURROW's office.

BURROW spoke briefly to [redacted] and then indicated the youngster would have to wait for his father as he was going to be suspended for the rest of the day. At that point, [redacted] stood up and stated if he were not going to be allowed to stay he might just as well go home now. The school policy does not permit a student to leave during the school day without a parent but since [redacted] lived close by and appeared to be in an agitated state BURROW agreed that he should go.

[redacted] left the office and slammed the office door loudly. BURROW could hear the youngster walking down the hallway and apparently he was kicking the metal lockers as he went. BURROW then heard the sound of breaking glass and stepped from his office to see [] breaking out the windows in the classroom doors as he passed each door in succession. He had wrapped his coat sleeve around his fist to protect his hand from the glass. He broke out five windows in all before he reached the end of the long corridor and the sound had attracted several other teachers who intercepted [] at the end of the corridor. BURROW identified the teachers as [] and []. The teachers assisted by BURROW brought [] back to BURROW's office.

b7C

They succeeded in sitting him down but after a few seconds [] jumped up and struck BURROW on the side of the head. BURROW then reached out and partially grabbed or punched [] in the collarbone area in order to ward him off. At this point Mr. [] succeeded in coming between the two and attempted to calm [].

b6
b7C

[] again sat down and appeared to be gaining some control although he continually flexed and unflexed his fists. Suddenly he jumped up and picked up an ashtray which was on the desk and threw it at Mr. BURROW. The ashtray struck BURROW on the hip and then shattered against a wall. At this point, at Mr. [] suggestion, BURROW left the office to await the arrival of [].

b6
b7C

b6
b7C

On the 27th of January, [] again withdrew him from school as a result of the incident and made charges that BURROW had struck his son and had also caused him considerable agitation because of the incident.

The only other person who might have had knowledge of the precise incident would have been Mr. [] the guidance counselor who was present during a part of the activities.

b6
b7C

The following description of BURROW was obtained through information furnished by him and personal observation:

[redacted]
Kentucky, advised he is the assistant principal at the Fort Knox High School located on the military reservation.

He is acquainted with [redacted] who was a student at the high school. [redacted] had been a problem periodically and particularly during recent weeks. He apparently had adopted an "I don't care attitude" as evidenced by the fact that on a semester examination taken on January 24, 1972, [redacted] had scored a 21.

The precise incident which resulted in [redacted] being called to the principal's office involved a book which was missing from the classroom and which belonged to a teacher, Mrs. [redacted]. Several other students had told Mrs. [redacted] that [redacted] had the book as they had seen him walk out of the classroom with the book.

As a result [redacted] had requested [redacted] to see him on the morning of January 25, 1972. [redacted] came in late that morning shortly after 9 a.m. and reported to Mr. [redacted] who as assistant principal is in charge of discipline. When [redacted] questioned [redacted] about the book [redacted] denied he had taken it admitting only that he had picked the book up to look at it and then replaced it. Subsequently, however, he admitted taking the book and that it was now at his home.

At that point [redacted] asked him why he had not stayed after school when ordered to do so. [redacted] reacted immediately by jumping up and throwing the books he had in his hand against the office wall. He seemed highly agitated but settled slightly and mentioned to [redacted] that he had seen a doctor who had prescribed [redacted] but that he had not [redacted] as prescribed.

At this point [redacted] suggested they go into the principal's office which was nearby. Mr. [redacted] the principal, was in his office and they decided to suspend [redacted] for the day and requested he wait for [] whom they would call. [] stated he would not wait and was going home. He left the office slamming the door as he went. As he walked down the corridor [] could hear some noise and then heard breaking glass. [] went out into the corridor and saw [] break out two separate classroom door windows and later found three other windows had been broken by him.

b7C

The noise had attracted the attention of Mr. [] a teacher, and [] a student who intercepted [] and held him until BURROW and [] caught up. BURROW and [] returned [] to the principal's office to await his father. [] called [] and told him he was needed at the school in connection with his son's behavior. [] was abusive on the phone but finally agreed he would come over as soon as possible.

b6
b7C

At this time the only ones in the office were Mr. BURROW, [] and [] was sitting in one of the chairs and was instructed to stay there until his father arrived. Suddenly [] jumped up and struck BURROW in the face apparently with his fist. BURROW responded by slapping [] twice with his open hand. [] stepped between them attempting to shove [] away and [] slapped [] along side the face. [] did not react but simply looked at [] who then began to cry and appear to settle down.

b6
b7C

They remained there for a short time feeling that [] had begun to calm down when suddenly he jumped up, grabbed an ashtray from the desk and threw it at Mr. BURROW. The ashtray hit BURROW in the side and broke against the wall.

b6
b7C

[] felt because of what had occurred Mr. BURROW's presence only increased [] agitation and he requested BURROW to leave the office. BURROW did and [] although he remained highly agitated, did nothing else until his father arrived.

LS 70-3211
